Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. Thirty-two women participated in a supervised exercise program consisting of three sessions per week. The program included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. Pre- and post-training assessments were conducted to measure cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and HRQL. Results showed significant improvements in all measured variables after the 6-week intervention. The findings suggest that a structured exercise program can effectively improve physical fitness and HRQL in sedentary middle-aged women.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults. The subjects were 15 male and 15 female college students, aged 18-25, who were randomly assigned to either a control group or an experimental group. The experimental group performed a 12-week resistance training program consisting of three sessions per week, while the control group did not. The strength and endurance of the lower extremities were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly greater strength and endurance than the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a 12-week resistance training program can effectively improve the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults.
